

RNs Are In Demand - Is It Your Dream Job?

First off what does a registered nurse do? Like most careers, it depends on what type of job the RN is doing, as there are many options available. Generally when most people think about RNs they see them directly working with patients such as in a hospital or doctors office.

Advancement to supervisor is common for many RNs during their career. This path is not for everyone though as many people do not enjoy managing others and those types of registered nurses are usually happier working directly with patients.

So what career options are available to registered nurses? Of course most RNs work in hospitals and help patients with treatments but in different departments. For example some work in surgery or the maternity room as well as other departments.

Some nurses work at Doctors office or in a medical center and assist the doctor. Other nurses may only work in a laboratory setting.

Traveling to a patients home is common as well in a role called a home health nurse. They may go to someones house to help who is recovering from surgery or other illnesses.

Who else hires nurses? Private organizations and the government do for public health nurses. They will work in communities to help provide preventive care or to provide other services such as counseling families.

What type of job requirements do nursing supervisors hold? Of course managing the nursing staff is one of their responsibilities but they may also be responsible for ordering new supplies and making sure the medical equipment is maintained.

Advanced nursing careers are also available such as a certified registered nurse anesthetists or a certified nurse midwife.

About the Author

If you want to be a nurse make sure to find a couple of nursing exam study guides to help you pass then entrance exam. Remember nurses can earn their rn to bsn later in their career.

Source: <http://www.inquireinto.com>